Sources. The first large donation came when Gus Stephenson, a saxophonist who has been in bands all over New Mexico for 50 years, gave stacks of band music that he has saved during his career.

Individuals and music stores have donated more music and some instruments. The band now has more equipment than members, said Harry Johns, a campus pastor, who says the band is informal and unofficial of the band.

The atmosphere at practices is informal. Band members joke with Wolfe, the director, and with each other. Attire is informal, and the band is not a formal organization. There are no titles, and none of the three wore a white shirt.

Despite the informality, Wolfe would eventually like to present concerts with the band. The only band in the Old Town Plaza during the 1990s was the

Band Seeking Adult Members

A band that has met in weekly practice sessions here and there for the past couple of years under the sponsorship of the Albuquerque Parks Dept., has agreeable new quarters this fall, in the auditorium at Bandelier Elementary School.

Rehearsal time is Mondays from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. and the number of persons presently participating is about 30, four of them women.

An invitation to join the band is open to adults. All one need do is show up at a rehearsal with his instrument. It doesn't matter how rusty his skill may be.

Ken Anderson, principal trumpet player and personnel manager of the Albuquerque Symphony, directs the group.

A teacher of band in the public schools for 13 years, Anderson is a little haunted by the thought that hundreds, even thousands, of persons in Albuquerque could be enjoying the skill they nurtured as children.

"In the past 25 years," he said, "the public schools here have had 35,000 band starters, most of whom played for several years and many of whom went right through high school playing in the band.

"But it's a declining pyramid. And when school and college are over, that's it. There's been no place to go."

Anderson sees, in his mind's eye, instruments tucked away under beds, in attics and on shelves all over town.

Before he came on as the band's director five months ago, the group was filled out from time to time with high school students. But Anderson doesn't believe in that.

"You approach adults differently," he says. "I like to go back into their experience and draw from it. And their experience is fantastic.

"You'll hear with what style they play a traditional march, for example — much better than any high school band. And they could play three concerts from the pieces we have in the repertoire.

"I enjoy this immensely and know what can be accomplished. They're here for fun, but the fun's enhanced by producing better music, so we work at it. For their own pleasure, I wish a hundred other old-time band enthusiasts would come out and join us."

fact on his future interest in theater.

Foremost among these is the Salisbury Cathedral, in England, where he heard a boys choir sing one Christmas, so dramatically influencing him that this gave impetus to his later career in drama.

MORLEY WAS stationed with the Army in France, and during leave in England attended church at Salisbury, where this performance gripped his youthful imagination, making its lasting impression.

Morley saw several important plays in London, among them Maggie Smith in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," the new play "Glasstown" about the Bronte family and a show at the London Paladium titled "Paladium '73," starring Bruce Forsyth.

He recalls "Paladium" as "a marvelous staging of English music hall, reminiscent of old vaudeville days, with exciting color, costumes and sparkling lines in a whirl of activity."

He also saw "Sleuth," a surprise play, now in its fourth year on the boards in London. "The Mouse Trap," now in its 21st consecutive year of performance, is still filling the house at The Ambassador, as it was when Morley was there four years ago.

GREECE, the true cradle of the performing arts, was another highlight of the trip.

There he saw theaters still standing and in use, there since 500 B.C., long before mortar was even thought of, and so perfectly built that they've stood for some 2000 years. He was impressed by the excellent acoustics of these theaters, where one can hear in every part, entirely without amplifiers.

"Of course everyone can read and study about Greek theater, and I use this in my classes every year, yet now I can truthfully say "I was there" and give a more meaningful presentation," Morley said.

He was also very much interested in a light and sound show in Athens, "a kind of touristy thing" when the hill of the Acropolis is floodlighted, spotlighting each of the ancient buildings surrounding this hill in the center of the city.

Commentary was in English, explaining the significance of each theater as it became the focal point of the show.

Dear Frank:

On behalf of the Officers and members of Albuquerque Elks Lodge No. 461, I thank you and the other members of the Albuquerque Municipal Band who played our "Concert by the Pool" last Sunday, August 10th.

We had hoped for a bigger turnout, but all who attended were most enthusiastic and complimentary in their comments about the concert. I'm sure everyone appreciated the fact that your band members gave of their own free time to make the concert possible. Please thank them, and especially your Director, Kenny Anderson.

As a token of our appreciation, here is our check in the amount of fifty dollars ($50.00), which you may use to buy additional music or in any other way it will help the band.

I hope we can work out something for a midweek evening concert in our ballroom sometime this Fall. Secretary Bob Van Driel will get in touch with you about this in the near future.

Sincerely,

Harold A. Newlander

ORCHESTRA SPOTLIGHT

Lloyd Nelson

Lloyd Nelson is a specialist in Espalier fruit trees. In case you don't know what that is, it's a European technique for growing trees as a wall decoration and space saver. Lloyd says his other hobby is playing for ACLQA — he has been a percussionist with us for the last seven or eight shows, starting with 1776. Mr. Nelson is originally from Chicago and has spent the last sixteen years in Albuquerque where he is a scientist for Sandia Labs. He has five musical children, all of whom have played in ACLQA orchestras, and he now completes the cycle of playing with all of them, as his daughter Artis Pulest (bassoon) is now playing for her first Light Opera show. Lloyd asked us to put in a plug for the Albuquerque Municipal Band, another organization to which he belongs. The AMB has a new director and is now undergoing a facelift, so get out there and support The Arts, Albuquerque!

FOR YOUR INFORMATION:

The new museum is on the corner of Mountain and 19th, near Old Town. To get there quickly and easily, take I-40 west to the Rio Grande Boulevard exit. Go south on Rio Grande to Mountain, then east on Mountain (one block) and south on 19th to the museum parking lot--which may be full--or the Old Town dirt parking lot, which should have some room.

If indoors, we will play in the Permanent History Hall (percussionists: see me tonight for shortest route to performance area). If outdoors, we perform in front of the science wing. Look for the big arch.

If the weather is sunny and hot we will definitely play indoors.

Your Musical Talents

By TOM JACOBS
Journal Arts and Entertainment Writer

Wondering what to do with that bass tube you got for Christmas?

How about that oboe you found stuffed in your stocking?

Or perhaps this Christmas you discovered you can sing a pretty mean carol. What can you do with this vocal talent for the rest of the year?

Fear not, for if you have at least a small amount of experience on your instrument chances are that one of Albuquerque's amateur musical groups needs you. The Albuquerque Philharmonia, the Albuquerque Municipal Band and the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra Chorus are all about to begin rehearsals for their spring seasons, and all are looking for new members.

Jo Kester, founder of the Albuquerque Philharmonia, says she is looking for "people who have their violas stashed under their beds."

In other words, she is looking to recruit men and women who have had experience playing in an orchestra, such as in high school or college, and are interested in doing so again.

"We don't want to take anyone out of their high school or college orchestra," she added.

The 60-member orchestra, which was founded in 1972, is "totally volunteer," she said. "Nobody gets paid. Amateur means we love what we're doing. That's why we're doing it."

Specifically, Ms. Kester said she would like to enlist 20 additional string players, particularly violinists, violists and cellists. There are no formal tryouts; new members are welcome to come to a rehearsal or two and see if they fit in comfortably with the level of playing.

The orchestra rehearses from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Mondays at Del Norte High School. Its next concert, on Feb. 22, will include music of Bach and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger" by Wagner.

While the Philharmonia is looking for string players, the municipal band needs woodwinds, according to music director Herb Mattick.

"We need flutes, clarinets, bass clarinets, bassoons, oboes," he said. "We have at least one of each species, but we need more. The sonority of the band is dependent upon a big woodwind section."

"Then there are tubas," he added. "You can never get enough bass players." Though they are not as badly needed, performers of other brass instruments are also welcome to join he said.

Like the Philharmonia, "We ask that a performer come to us with high school or better still, with college experience," Mattick said. "There is no audition."

The band rehearses from 7 to 9 p.m. Mondays at La Mesa Presbyterian

Amateur Groups Can Use 'Hidden' Musical Talents

Church. Its next major activity will be a television taping for KNME around the middle of this month.

If your musical instrument is your voice, there are several area choruses interested in hearing what you can do.

"There's always a general opening" for new members of the Albuquerque Civic Chorus, according to spokeswoman Kay Weinrod. Anyone interested in auditioning should call Harry R. Hook, music director of both the chorus and the First United Methodist Church.

She added, however, that "at the moment, we're pretty well set. We're rapidly overcrowding the church where we perform."

That is not true of the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra Chorus, according to its director, Brad Holmes.

"I'm looking for as many capable men as I can get," he said. "I'd like to see us add another 10 or 15 guys," both tenors and basses, he added.

Men are particularly needed because the group will perform Prokofiev's "Alexander Nevsky" this spring, a work that calls for a large male chorus. Holmes added quickly, however, that he is also interested in listening to sopranos and altos.

"Singers interested in joining the chorus should arrange for an audition by calling the NMSO office. The chorus rehearses at 7:30 p.m. Mondays in the University of New Mexico's Fine Arts Center."

Why should someone join the chorus? Holmes answer was simple. "For me, it's been really fun to perform with the best orchestra in the state," he said.

"To combine with a real professional masterworks" is quite a thrill, he said. The chorus should be even more exciting in February, when the chorus will perform with world-renowned soprano Renata Scotto.

Holmes other reason for being associated with the chorus could apply to the other groups as well. "It's always great to see other people putting themselves into the music, and you being a part of it," he said.
